

Individuals

Employees, jobseekers and private participants across Australia are now achieving nationally recognised qualifications, short courses and career progression in the health sector with the health training solutions initiative.

If you are interested in a health support career, you should become involved because:

- ° you will gain a nationally recognised industry standard qualification
- ° the courses are directly relevant to employment and work in the health sector
- ° you can have your existing skills recognised and upgrade your skill levels as your career progresses
- ° the programs provide you with a structured, accredited study option
- ° complete flexibility is available in a range of delivery options, including undertaking a whole program onsite at work or at home
- ° you may be able to complete your chosen course program for free, and
- ° you and/or your employer may be eligible for access to financial incentives and support from both State and Commonwealth Governments

For further information on course support and funding opportunities, please refer to the "Support Programs" section.

“It was so good to work and study at the same time. It gave me enough time to study and to be supported at my workplace with my trainer. He was so helpful in all areas.”

Gihan, Practice Administrator, Victoria.

“The course exceeded my expectations… it was challenging, interesting, insightful and career changing. The Esset Australia Consultant was excellent - supportive, patient, encouraging, offering guidance and all with a wonderful sense of humour.”

Linda, Health Administrator, Tasmania.

Frequently Asked Questions - Individuals

The following Frequently Asked Questions have been included to assist you with any queries you may have about the programs before you enrol.

Are these nationally recognised courses?

These courses are nationally recognised, meaning that they are recognised as accredited qualifications in any State and Territory in Australia.

How do the courses run?

The courses are offered through a variety of flexible pathways, allowing you to complete your course on location at your workplace or at home. Optional workshops are also provided if you prefer to access these.

How much time do the courses take?

Depending on the qualification you select, the courses are undertaken over 3 months – 2 years.

How is the assessment conducted?

A range of practical tasks are completed as part of your daily work routine, or through projects. All tasks are based on the practical application of the course into the health sector, or if you are employed, into the organisation you are working in. There are no exams.

Do I have to be employed in the health sector?

No you do not have to be an employee, or employed in the health sector. All programs are also available for jobseekers and for private participants.

Can I get recognition for skills I already have?

All participants have the option of recognition of their existing skills through a Recognition of Prior Learning (RPL) process.

What happens if I cancel my enrolment without completing the course?

If an enrolment is cancelled before completion, you will receive a Nationally Recognised Statement of Attainment, outlining the units in the course that you successfully completed.

How do I find out what support or funding is available to me?

Simply submit an expression of interest form and a consultant will be in contact with you to undertake an eligibility assessment of your background.
